The Paris journals state that a comedy in four acts, steriously submitted to the committee of administraon at the Theatre Français, has proved, on examina-on, to be a work of the highest merit. Its author, hitherto unknown, is said to be a simple bourgeoise. A new play by Madame Dudevant has been accepted at the same theatre. There seems to be a run on Muscovite fories. M. Scribe, it is said, has a Russian drama on the pis, with principal parts in it for M. Bressant and for

Idile. Rachel.

Rachel has at length come to a thorough understanding with the Theatre Français; she will give her services for six consecutive months in the year for a certain weighty consideration—the rest of the year to be consect. when, as we hear, she will depart for America. After the departure of Rachel, Pleasy once more enters upon an engagement at this house; her salary is to be 24,000

A gentleman residing at Easton, Easex (Eng.), is said to have discovered another portrait of Shak-peare. A few days since he purchased a small oval portrait, on wood, 6 inches by 4% inches, of the bard of Avon. It is ted a little to the right, with a pale, pleasant counnance, but no ears nor earrings are seen. The ruff is agle, with a lace pointed edge, and nearly covers the oulders, and the garment is of a violet color, striped oss, with a broad green lace down the front, and-yel-

by buttons. It is a bust length, and he intends to call the Easton Shakspeare, of 1854, by Nieholas Hilliard by whom it is thought to have been painted.

During the performance of "Hamlet" at Burnley (Eng.) theatre, the gentleman who played the part of the Ghost was so annoyed at sundry exclamations by the "igods," who, during the whole evening, had been more than usually uprearious, that, after in vain attempting to reason them into good order, he doffed the windingto reason them into good order, he doffed the winding-sheet in which he was wrapped, and left the stage for the gallery, to inflict bodily chastisement on some of the effenders. The interference of the police was necessary
